EDUCATION IN CHINA

中国教育

Editor: Zha Qiang, York University, Canada

Chinese are known worldwide as top students and scholars, but intellectuals were persecuted during the Cultural Revolution, and only recently has attending college education been possible for the majority. China is transforming its higher-education system, now the largest in the world, to include collaboration with Western scholars and to provide educational access to students in rural areas. Education in China provides unique coverage of learning at all levels.

THE INTERNET IN CHINA

中国的网络

Editors: Ashley Esarey, Whitman College, Randy Kluver, Institute for Pacific Asia, Texas A&M University

Internet in China provides much-needed historical background on the communications revolution and technological developments that are transforming Chinese society in many ways, creating new conflicts as well as opportunities. Experts write about community building, social networking, social isolation, education, entertainment, and the digital divide. The volume can be used in a variety of courses, including communications, international relations, and human-computer interaction.

BRAND CHINA

西方看中国

Editor: Qing Cao, Liverpool John Moores University

China now plays an increasingly significant role in international affairs, testing its influence at home and abroad. Western reportage of China thus addresses a growing home audience eager to understand current developments and the issues that will shape China's future—from human rights to renewable energy. Brand China explores how Western and global perspectives on China, past and present, have been shaped (often unfairly) by different cultural values and bias.

CHINA SEES THE WORLD

中国看世界

Editor: Qing Cao Liverpool John Moores University

When the mid-1800s confronted China with Western modernity, increasingly competitive trade, and eventually war, the Chinese found themselves for the first time humiliated by Western powers. China Sees the World collects essays by Chinese scholars, translations of historic documents, and portrayals from literature and the media to explain how the Chinese, leaders and ordinary people alike, have perceived the rest of the world, and how they see it today.
